What a CDD is

A CDD is a small unit of local government. It paid for the roads and lakes in your village, and it collects for them on your tax bill.

Picture a village before anyone lives there. Someone has to build the roads. Someone has to dig the lakes and lay the pipes. All of that costs money, long before the first house is sold.

In Florida, a developer can set up a community development district to do this work. People call it a CDD for short. Florida law calls it a local unit of special-purpose government. Its job is to build and look after the things a community shares.

The district borrows the money up front by selling bonds. Then each lot pays its share back, year by year. The district also charges each lot for the upkeep of what it built. Both charges are a lien on the lot until they're paid.

The charge isn't based on what your house is worth. It's a set amount for your lot. The county tax collector adds it to your property tax bill, in a section called non-ad valorem assessments.

Non-ad valorem assessment

A charge on the tax bill that isn't based on the value of the house. Ad valorem means by value. The district sets the amount for each lot, and Florida law lets it become a lien on the home, even a homestead.

SOURCE Florida Statutes 197.3632 (2026), uniform method for collecting non-ad valorem assessments

The CDD isn't your homeowners association, and it isn't the county. It's a third thing, with its own elected board and its own budget. The cards below show the three side by side.

FIG. 01 · THREE PAYERS

The county, the district and the association

Each card is one body you pay. Look at which ones put a line on the tax bill.

County

PROPERTY TAXES

Based on the value of the house. Set by the county and the other bodies that tax by value.

IS IT ON THE PROPERTY TAX BILL?

✓ Yes. It's the main part of the bill

WHAT IT PAYS FOR

County services, paid by everyone in the county

CDD

THE DISTRICT

A unit of local government with its own elected board. A set amount for your lot, not a share of its value.

IS IT ON THE PROPERTY TAX BILL?

✓ Yes, as two lines in the non-ad valorem section

WHAT IT PAYS FOR

Paying back the bonds that built the roads, lakes and pipes, and keeping them up

HOA

THE ASSOCIATION

A private association of the owners, with its own board. It bills you directly.

IS IT ON THE PROPERTY TAX BILL?

⊖ No. The association sends its own bill

WHAT IT PAYS FOR

Rules, approvals for changes to your home, and the day-to-day upkeep of your village

The association's dues never appear on the tax bill. On the Ranch, the district's lines do. That's the quickest way to tell them apart.

02

The two lines on the tax bill

A district can put two lines on the bill. One pays back the bonds. The other pays for upkeep. Only the first one ever ends.

Picture the tax bill that comes in November. Near the bottom is the section for non-ad valorem assessments. Your district's name is there, beside its charges.

The first is the debt line. On the Ranch it's labeled I&S, and Town Hall calls it debt service. It's your lot's share of paying back the bonds that built the village.

The Stewardship District says its debt line is fixed and can't go up. It's paid over about 30 years. You can also pay it off in full when you buy the house, if you'd rather.

The second is the maintenance line, labeled O&M. It pays for the year's upkeep: the roads, the lakes, the landscaping and the gates. The district sets it in its budget each year, so it can go up or down.

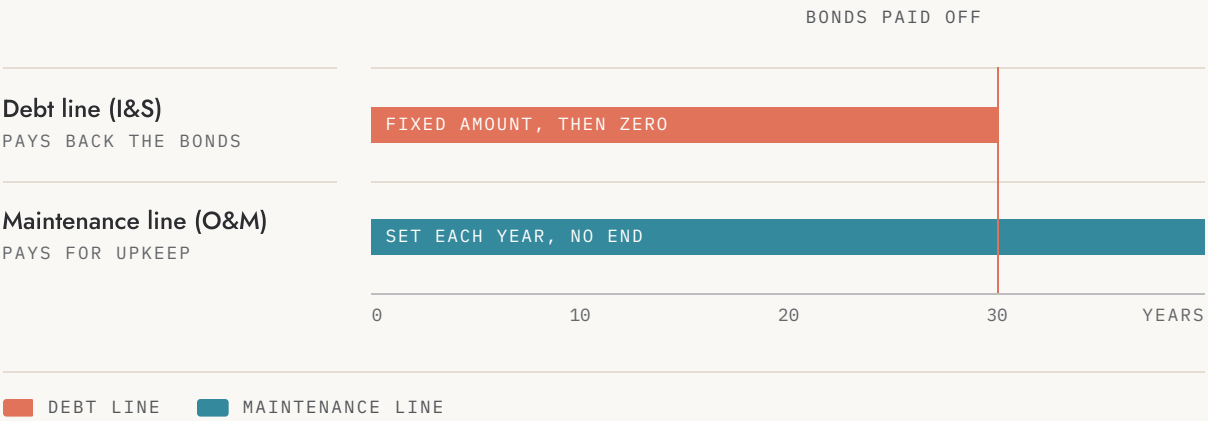

Here's the part that's easy to miss. When the bonds are paid off, the debt line reads zero. But the maintenance line goes on for as long as the district does. So when someone says a village has paid off its CDD, they mean the first line. Ask about the second.

Summerfield and Riverwalk are an example. Their village manual said in 2020 that the district had no bonds left to pay. So the debt line there is gone, and the maintenance line is still on the bill.

FIG. 02 · THE TWO LINES

The debt line ends. The maintenance line doesn't.

Read left to right, in years from when the bonds were sold. The top bar stops. The bottom bar keeps going.

The 30 years is the Stewardship District's own figure for its bonds. An older numbered district's bonds may have run on a different clock, and some are already paid off. The bars are illustrative: they show the idea, not one district's dates.

03

The three kinds of district on the Ranch

Lakewood Ranch has three kinds of district. Which one you're in depends on your village.

The older villages are split into five numbered districts. Town Hall calls this part of the Ranch Phase I. The districts are CDD 1, 2, 4, 5 and 6. There's no CDD 3 on the list.

Each numbered district has a five-member board, elected by the voters who live there. Town Hall does the office work for all five. The village manuals say the districts' job today is upkeep: the roads, the common landscaping and the gates.

Every other part of the Ranch is in the Lakewood Ranch Stewardship District. The Legislature created it by a special act in June 2005. It's one district across many villages, in both Manatee and Sarasota counties.

Its charge differs by neighborhood. It depends on the size of the area and what was built to serve it. The district doesn't do the day-to-day upkeep of each village. That stays with the village's homeowners association.

Windward, on the Sarasota County side, has a district of its own. Sarasota County created it by ordinance in December 2019. When we checked, its website said it hadn't yet raised the money for its planned improvements. So its bill won't look like an older village's. Read the current bill for the exact parcel.

How to read a parcel's bill

Don't go by a neighbor's bill. Pull the bill for the exact parcel. It takes a few minutes online.

Both counties let you look up a tax bill online. In Manatee County, go to the tax collector's site and look up the property. You can see each charge by taxing body, and print a copy of the bill.

In Sarasota County, the tax collector's property tax page links to its search portal. The bill is a combined notice. The taxes based on value are on top. The non-ad valorem assessments are below them.

Find that section and read the district's name beside each line. You'll see the debt line and the maintenance line, each with its own amount. Write both down.

Then look at the August notice. Each year the property appraiser mails a notice of proposed property taxes. It's called the TRIM notice. In Sarasota County it lists the proposed non-ad valorem assessments too. If you're buying in the fall, it's a better preview of next year's bill than last year's.

One more thing. The estoppel certificate is the association's statement of what a seller owes the association. The district's lines aren't part of it. The district collects with the taxes, so its lines are on the tax bill only.

When the bill comes, and the discount for paying early

Tax bills go out in November. Pay that month and the county takes 4 percent off. The discount shrinks each month after that.

Here's the year. The county values every house as of January 1. The property appraiser mails the TRIM notice in August. The tax collector mails the bills in November, and they're due by the end of March.

Florida law gives a discount for paying early. It's 4 percent in November, 3 in December, 2 in January and 1 in February. In March there's no discount. After March 31, the taxes are late.

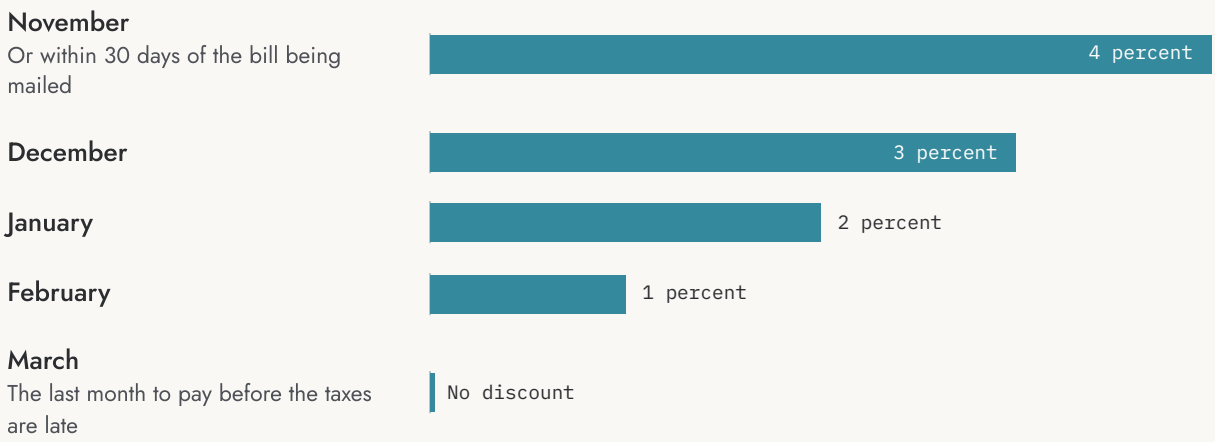

The discount applies to the district's lines too. They're collected under the same rules as the taxes.

If you close in the fall, the year's bill may already be out. Ask the title company how it will be split between you and the seller at closing.

Before you make an offer

Use this list for any house on the Ranch. Most of it takes a few minutes online.

FIG. 06 · THE CHECKLIST

Seven things to check before you make an offer

Go in order. Each step helps with the next one.

- ☐ 01 Find out which district the village is in
  Use the figure in section 3, or read the district's name on the parcel's bill.
- ☐ 02 Pull the tax bill for the exact parcel
  Manatee or Sarasota tax collector. Don't go by a neighbor's bill.
- ☐ 03 Read the two district lines
  Debt (I&S) and maintenance (O&M). Write down both.
- ☐ 04 Ask whether the debt line is paid off, or when it will be
  If someone says the CDD is paid off, they mean this line only.
- ☐ 05 Check the August notice
  The TRIM notice previews next year's bill.
- ☐ 06 Ask about paying the debt line off at closing
  The Stewardship District allows it. Ask the district and your lender whether it makes sense for you.
- ☐ 07 Add the association's dues on top
  They're never on the tax bill. Ask the association for its budget.
